

Today was a long day...

But I'm pretty sure you know by now that every day is a long day for me. Gave a 1-hour-long presentation today. Dammm... that was exhausting. Went pretty good tho. I saw the team again. Idk anyone really missed me except Leo. He is a good guy. Although, something weird did happen with Sophia. Like, normally she doesn't give a shit about me, but now she asked where I've been. I mean, it still doesn't mean shit, but honestly... I was kinda surprised that she would talk to me about anything that isn't about work. So that was odd.

Speaking of work. It's so fucking exhausting. I latterly feel myself getting drained. Testing model after model. Tinkering the tiniest details and perform tests again. Luckily, some tests take quite long to load, so I can rest during those moments. Honestly, I haven't really done anything except work. I didn't even time to study for my upcoming exams.

Anyway, enough about me. Let's see what you're up to. (Proceeds to read day 16 of the Zoë letter series.) Oh, lol. Tomorrow I'll explain what I do exactly for my job. And yeah, maybe I'll move out when I'm graduated. Although, I would have to think about it, tho. I mean, I still haven't decided if I want to go to that university in Sweden. If I decide not to, I'll probably go look for a job. Maybe work for half a year, and start thinking about moving out.

You're right, btw. Living by yourself ain't that bad. I can do whatever I want, whenever I want. However, I don't find necessarily better than living at my parents house. But that might have something to do with the fact that I'm an only child. Although, at some point, I do want my own place. With a pool table and stripper poles, of course.

And omg you're so right! 8-ball pool after work. That's going to be fucking awesome! I still am kinda afraid that I'll become some corporate IT workaholic. Nahhhh, probably not.

Anyway, that it for now. See ya tomorrow.

Love you,

Byee
